

Regolith's low conductivity confines the sintering front: throughput is set by source power and dwell, not the coupon

(a) Sintering is confined to a thin near-surface layer (b) Sintered depth grows slowly

